As positive as the economy has been lately, the state of our union is actually not in good shape. This financial and political crisis means the American people are in for yet another change in who leads our country. It's going to be hard, but we can change the direction. First, we need a change in our political leaders. ADVERTISEMENT The country is in a dark age of obfuscation and delusion. Everything is political, and everything is about "them" versus "us." But the essence of politics is power, and who has it. You can't really change the American electorate, because the voters are voting against "change." Voters want change for change's sake; they oppose actual "change." All they want to do is to change things in ways that suit their twisted notions. Today, nearly 90 percent of the electorate would vote against a candidate who could bring about needed change in government. The moral character and character of the candidates have sunk to new lows. It's pretty bad, and I'm sure you've seen the recent video of Democrat Party Congresswoman-elect Toni Clarke's bizarre gyrating dance number at a black pride event. She somehow manages to lap Tony Robbins at being truly unhinged and bizarre. No wonder so many great Americans are leaving our country. In short, we need new leadership, one that is beyond the "low-bar" of "them" versus "us." That leadership should start by voting for the Libertarian Party, and work their way up. Libertarians are not a good choice for America's rulership
